Casio Loopy: The Book

David Glotz

- The Casio Loopy (Japanese: ルーピー, known as My Seal Computer SV-100, is a 32-bit home video game console. Launched exclusively in Japan in October 1995 at a price of 25,000¥, its marketing was specifically aimed at female gamers.
- This console is equipped with a Hitachi SH7021 SuperH 32-bit RISC CPU operating at 16MHz, along with 1MB of RAM and 2MB of ROM. It can display graphics in 512 colors and supports 4 channels of 12-bit PCM audio.
- The Loopy features a single controller port, which can be used with a standard game controller or a separately sold mouse.
- One standout feature of the Loopy is its built-in thermal color printer, allowing users to create stickers from game screenshots. An optional accessory, known as Magical Shop (マジカルショップ, Majikaru Shoppu), serves as a video capture device to obtain images from VCRs and DVD players. Users can add text to these images and create their own stickers. Including the software bundled with Magical Shop, the Loopy library consists of 11 titles.
- Developer Kenji Terada was involved in creating I Want a Room in Loopy Town! (ルーピータウンのおへやがほしい!.
- Software development wrapped up in November 1996, and production of the console ended in December 1998.

- Casio Loopy overview:

- # Loopy Acessories:

- Controller (XN-100) - One is included with the main unit. Like typical game consoles of its time, it features a directional pad and round buttons for START, A, B, C, and D on the surface, along with L and R trigger buttons located on the top side.

- Mouse (XN-110) - Available separately or as a bundle with compatible software. This two-button ball mouse matches the color of the Loopy console and is slightly smaller in size to suit its target audience. Compatible software will indicate its use with the Loopy Mouse on the box or cartridge.

- Thermal ribbon cartridge for the console.

- Specifications:

Anime Land
あにめらんど

Overview

This game is an art tool, in which players can create their own anime girls or boys and print them as stickers. Before starting on the design, the player selects the framework characteristics such as body shape. After establishing the character build, the player proceeds to make cosmetic changes to the face including hair, eyes, brows, nose, mouth, and head shape as well as facial expressions, accessories, clothes, screen backgrounds and patterns, and speech bubbles. In addition to a custom character, the player can also create a custom anime animal or object.

Overview

This game is designed as an art tool to create caricatures and facial impressions. First the player picks an avatar of a gender and age group. Using the selected avatar as a template, the player can customize the hairstyle, brows, eyes, nose, mouth, head shape and clothes. The parts of the face can be repositioned and resized. Additionally, paint tools can be used to further accessorize the caricature with colors, objects and speech bubbles. To finish off, the caricature can be placed in one of many sceneries provided. The player also has the option to paint their own pictures from scratch or make use of one of the ready made caricatures.

- Final Considerations: I hope you, the reader, enjoyed this brief and intriguing Japanese adventure. This book is relatively concise, considering it is solely about the Loopy. However, it’s worth checking out the references and additional content that will be provided next for a deeper understanding of this system. I am very interested in the world of video games and their consoles, so I would appreciate it if you could take a look at my other works, which are just as interesting and well-illustrated, generally containing fascinating information. Thank you all!
